

Householder MOT your home

New Campaign

New research has revealed that homeowners are risking their lives by not getting their electrics fully checked, leaving potentially deadly faults lurking in thousands of homes.

Our survey revealed that nearly nine out of ten (89%) homeowners don't really think about getting their electrics fully tested, with eighty eight percent (88%) confessing that getting their gas boiler checked is more important to them. Over a third (32%) admitted they have never had the electrics in their home fully tested.

That's why NICEIC has launched 'MOT Your Home', a national consumer safety campaign warning homeowners about the dangers of electrical DIY. Fronted by home-improvement expert, Linda Barker, the new campaign encourages homeowners whose property is over 10 years old to employ a registered electrician to carry out a Periodic Inspection Report, which acts like an MOT for the property.

Linda Barker, NICEIC spokesperson, says: "I've teamed up with the NICEIC to encourage consumers to get their homes checked and make electrical safety a top priority. Even though it's tempting to try and save a few pennies where possible at the moment, a simple home MOT could save lives. To help homeowners ensure optimum electrical safety in their home I've put together some simple tips and advice to protect families and homes from electrical fire risks."

To ensure any report or electrical work carried out is safe and complies with Building Regulations, it's advisable to employ an NICEIC electrician.
